TERRE-HAUTE:

WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 16, 1861 THE London Times and Post are not satisfied with the letter written by Prince Gontsonaxorr, in behalf of the Czar,, to the Russian Minister at Washington, and by him communicated to Mr. SEWARD. The Times is is compelled to admit that it has about it an air of sincerity, yet it cannot conceal its surprise that "the greatest autocrat in the world" should sympathise with the troubles of the friends of Republican Government in this country. It is disposed to deny that any such sympathy exists and to attribute it rather to State Craft-to the wish to make the "common rivalry" which the United States and Russia both have "with the old countries of Western Europe," available, in the end, for unsettling the authority of Great Britain, both in the old and the new world. It is evidently startled somewhat; though it does not avow it, at a supposed alliance between the only two great governments of the world which can, with justice and propriety, claim "to be the nations of the future," and one would suppose that it foresaw the fulfilment of the prophecy which the Czar NICHOLAS is said to have made to Senator Douglas, when he visited St. Petersburg several years ago; that there were only two forms of government in the world, worth preserving-one in which but a single man governed, and the other where all the people governed-that all the rest were hermaphrodites, and that these two were destined in the end, to swallow up all the rest. Visions of this sort have before now flitted across the English mind, excited by the rapid strides towards greatness and prosperity of the powerful "northern bear" upon one side of her, and by the marvellous suddenness with which her own offspring, resting but the other day upon her lap, has bounded to her side, full grown and in the maturity of a vigorous manhood. It is no unusual fancy for British statesmen to see, in their excited imagivings, the flag of Russia floating above every minaret which lines the shores of the Bosphorus, and to yield, in consequence, to their period-1:al apprehensions that the balance of power in Europe, will be so unsettled that the o'd and effete monarchies may totter and fall. It was this fear of the growing power of this "nation of the future" which led the armies of England to the Crimea, and made them subject to the will and subservient to the ends of her dreaded and hated rival across the channel. And as they stood before the walls of Sebastopol, and filled up the gorges with their gallant dead, they were taught a lesson which they will not be likely to forget, that the empire which the Times passionately calls "barbarous" has become a controlling power in the world, and that the combined strength of both England and France was not sufficient to wrest from it a single foot of its territory. On the other hand, the blood which was shed by the gal lant six hundred at Balaclava, and the glorious charge at the Redan, only served to show that the successors of Peter the Great were quite able to beat back aggression, and to avenge an injury. And even since then, England has seen the bayonets of Russia bristling upon the borders of Persia, and has felt the influence of her emissaries at Herat employ cannot entirely conceal. Of course, these fears are not diminished as they turn their eyes towards the United States. The American correspondent of the Times had just informed the European world that he has note no doubt "of the ultimate power of the Northern and Western States to subjugate the seceded States in the South, and it was natural enough that this should invite a consideration of the effect of such a result. In looking forward to it the Times and Post, (the latter the organ of Lord Palmerston.) both limit the remarks of the Russian Minister to Mr. Seward, to "the balance of power upon the American Continent," seeming to overlook the fact or trying to disguise it, that whenever a combination of the two great "nations of the fature" shall control the balance of power here, it will necessarily subject to its influence all the governments of Europe. The Post is exultant at the idea that there can be no "identity of interest on the American Continent" between Russia and the United States, and that while England "possesses and occupies the extremity of the North American Continent" the balance of power here, cannot be disturbed, even by a restoration of the unity of our national power. But, herein lies the delusion of British Statesmen, who, whatever their professions as to the future of their own power, have never been able to demiss their dread of ours. Their pretext about the supply of cotton only serves to disguise this dread, but is not sufficient to concoal the motive of their professed sympathy for the rebel States. For while they make abundant professions of this sort, it is easy to | will do as well as they have done-to do better see that all they desire is, first, to strengthen | cannot be expected of men who have done the rebellion in the South until it shall be so well as you have done. And again, my strong enough to permanently divide the men, I ask God's richest blessing to be Union, and then, by the production of a suffi- showered upon you. Remember our matto cient supply of Cotton in their provinces, to -"Stendy Fir." - and the enemy can never hopeless dependency, thereby re-establish HAVE BONE. ing British authority upon this continent.

The prospect of being disappointed in the realization of this hope, and the fear that, commander ! when we shall become once more a united people, the governments of Russia and the United States will be recognized and acknowledged throughout the world as the two leading "nations of the future," have given rise to the ill natured comments of the Times and Post-the former representing the capisalists of hingland and the latter the government. But they will seet, in any way, infin ence or change the results to which we are renegade. The gunboat Conestogs rescued besterling. CHEAT MOUNTAIN PASS, !

CAMP 14th REGIMENT, Oct. 5th. Editors Express:-The clarion of war has sounded again amid these mountans, and the 'd-d Yankees" descended with appalling yells upon the frightened and retreating rebels. Success crowns our efforts again, and the enemy made thoroughly acquainted with the "gallant 14th,,' and its motto, "Steady Fire."

We left our camp at one o'clock on the morning of the 3rd, destined for a reconnoi sance with the rebels, who are encamped twelve miles east of us We drove in their ckets at early daylight, and moved rapidly within a mile of their camp-surveyed Hager their position, arranged our forces and went to work in an earnest, business-like way. The action commenced in a large meadow directly in front of the rebel camp-and heralded by our buglers sounding "Yankee Doodle Dandy!" O! my countrymen, you bould have witnessed the stirring scene that followed! The 14th and 9th Indiana were aligned across the meadow, between the nountain on the left and the river on the right of us and constituting the advance.-The rebels, in great numbers, were deployed along the meadow-before us, behind the fences and thickets, and along the mountain to our left, and bank of the river to our right. Col. Kimball was in the front and heat of the battle, cool, active and determined, ordering his men into the hottest of the fight, who obeyed unfinchingly.

The "Bloody Ninth," likewise moved boldly and steadily into the jaws of death.

After sharp firing and repeated acts of bravery the rebels were totally routed, and retreated in wild confusion to their camp, securing themselves behind their breastworks.

Our flankers had little or nothing to do .-The artillery moved rapidly up, following our advance to within half a mile of their camp, when we laid flat upon the ground stretched across the meadow. The cannon were planted, and immediately belched forth their missils of death and destruction into the midst of the rebel camp, with a thundering noise, echoing and re-echoing through the of "Jove's dread thunderbolt," in their subimest mood. We were all wearied with our previous exertions, but when our batteries thundered out, and the rebel cannons quickly responded, and the air was filled with whiz zing shot and shell it inspired us with new life, and every man panted for action. I never felt so sublime in all my life. The 2d ward : J. G. Adams, 3d ward ; John Hacannonnading was incessant for five hours. during which time the infantry amused themselves by observing the effects of our cannonnading, and occassionally avoiding a good shot from the enemies guns. Our artillery silenced eight of their guns, and having exhausted their ammunition leisurely withdrew. The regiments were rallied and formed, and steadily took up their march for camp. The enemy were reinforced about the time our batteries suspended operations. They brought two new gms to bear upon us at this time, but they effected nothing. No device could draw them from their dens to risk an open field fight with us. and which they profess to be so fond of. The enemy had ample time to arrange his forces in the open field before their camp for a general field engagement, after they were apprised of our approach. They had the advantage of greatly superior numbers, and a knowledge of the ground which should have determined them on such a course. But the fact is, they have been, and are afraid to meet us in an open field fight. We anxiously hoped that they would so meet us, and our orces were eager to charge on the camp. out we had already accomplished more than the object of the reconnoisance, obtaining valuable knowledge of their position, strength

Our loss in the engagement was eight kiled and fifteen wounded-five of our woun led have died however since our return to camp. We killed over one hundred and fifty in the field fight, and wounding many. Our canconading, it is reported, by those who reonnoitered the rebel camp during the engagement, killed over five hundred, besides wounding a large number. Their dead were plainly discerned lying in clusters over their amp and in the trenches.

It was a successful and grand reconnoisance, and will long be remembered by every me present at the action.

The following was read to our regiment on dress parade vesterday evening, and was reorived by deafening and spirited cheers by the whole regiment.
